POLICE COURT.

James Hamilton, Charged with Burgiary, Held to the Grand Jury.

The case of James Hamilton, arrested last Wednesday for burglary, occupied from witnesses was conclusive enough to warrant his being held to the grand jury, Officer Seigfus testified he had arrested the defendant as he was endeavoring to dispose of his ill-gotten gains, and on further investigation found more of the plunder concealed in the cellar of the restaurant where Hamilton was employed as a cook. Hamilton testified that some boys had conceased the plunder in the cellar, and that he unexpectedly discovered it, and at once proceeded to have been wrongfully seized and sold by the defendant under an execution from the Third district court when the plaintiff held a chattel mortgage on the property of its disposal. Judge Wenger seemed rather incredulous and found him guilty as charged in the indictment, fixing his bond at ESA.

The inevitable Tom King plead guilty to having been "a little jagged," and during the month of March he will have an opportunity of watching the keen zephyrs from behind the bars. Five other drunks were sent along to keep him company.

After the clerk had read the charges Mr. Stephens stated that he desired to demur to some of the charges. The first four charges are allegations that the chief did not respond at certain fires. He presumed it was meant that the chief did not respond in person. These charges were no violation of any rule. There was no law compelling the chief to be present at all fires. His duties are very broad. The first charge is that he did not respond to a fire at 540 South Ninth East street. That was almost two miles from the headquarters. It would certainly be rather a violation of the chief's duties, he thought, to go to such a fire. It would thought, to go to such a fire. It would at least be considered very poor judg-

> In relation to the charges of arrogant and disrespectful conduct toward the men there were no specific allegations and therefore they could not hold.
> Judge Judd in replying thought Mr. Stephens had covered considerable ground and had attempted to set up a defense which in reality did not exist. He then read from the rules or ordinances to the effect that the chief is assumed to be at the fires, although they do not specifically state so. He they do not specifically state so. He presumed that the trial before the board would assimilate a trial before a regular court, and that the ordinances were plain enough for any layman to understand. He pointed to the power conferred on the chief in the absence of the mayor. The ordinances give the chief power to blow up houses with dynamite, cut down telegraph lines and poles when necessary, and it seemed to him that to put this power into one sub-official after another was clearly in conflict with the intention of the or-

Mr. Stephens desired to reply briefly Mr. Stephens desired to reply briefly to the rules read by Judge Judd. Mr. Stephens contended that the rules did not say the chief should be present at all fires. It gives the chief command at all fires, but it does not compel him to be present. In the chief's absence, the rules expressly provide that his assistant shall have charge of the fire, but nothing is stated in the rule that the chief shall be present.

Mr. Stephens thought it was extraordinary for Judge Judd to take the position that the charge relative to the chief's conduct need not be specified. It was stated that on several occasions

THE FIRST CHARGE.

The first charge of being absent from a fire at 540 South Ninth East street on January 6 last, was then taken up, and E. P. Mowers, a fireman at No. 2, was first called. He said when the alarm came in about 12:30 o'clock that day, he went to Station No. 1, or headquarters. There he met Chief Devine, who came in off the street about five minutes after the alarm had been turned in. The chief remained around headquarters for nearly an hour after the afarm.

A. R. Frasure was next called and Judge Judd began to question about the time expiring from the point of turning in the alarm until Chief Devine.
